“is there an app you wish would exist but doesn’t already?”

“An app that can tell how to plant all types of plant, from seeds or cuts, how to plant, what’s the right temperature to start seeding, how long it starts growing, etc”

“An app that lets you know what can / cannot be planted together (complementary) or which plants hate what plants.”

“It would be great if there is an app with all types of recipe from all over the world by categories.

notes

- They value convenience and functionality.
- Their most-used apps are easy to use and have information up-front.
- They also appreciate being able to stay connected with their family and friends who are as far away as across the globe.
- They avoid apps with too much clutter or unclear features.

gardening at home, deciding it's time to buy a new plant!

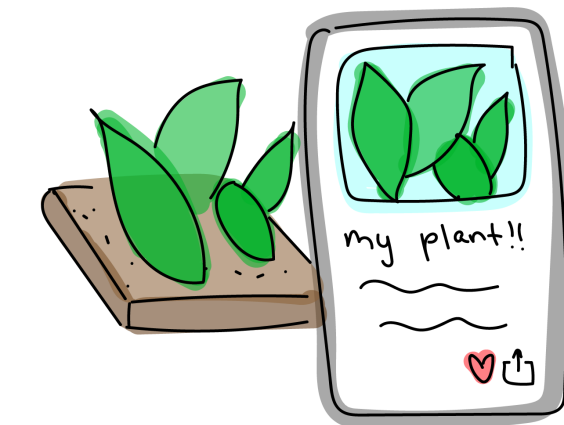

shopping for new plants; deciding which plant would fit best with the rest of the empty plot using the app to identify the plant and learn more information on the spot getting home and planting the new addition to the family with guidance from the app taking a photo of the plant, fully grown to share with friends and family!

harvesting the plants from the garden and wondering what to do with them finding a recipe on the app that uses the items we harvested from our garden cooking the most delicious-looking food with our freshly grown produce :)

meet aliyah.

aliyah is a 47-year old woman who immigrated from malaysia to attend college in america. cooking homemade malaysian food is important to her and reminds her of breakfasts and dinners with her mother and father, who still live in malaysia.

she owns a house with a large backyard and often finds seeds for asian vegetables at her local asian grocery market. she has been gardening for over 30 years, but wonders if she could be more efficient with spacing and planting.

aliyah is looking for an app that:

- has information regarding the asian vegetables she already grows, such as japanese eggplants, bok choy, thai basil, okra, and bitter melons
- has information regarding new asian vegetables beyond the ones she is currently growing
- offers advice on efficient gardening (such as use of space)

meet josie.

josie is a 26-year old chinese american woman who recently graduated from college. she has just moved into a new townhouse with space to garden in her backyard. she has been trying to get in touch with her chinese roots and is starting by learning to cook with chinese vegetables.

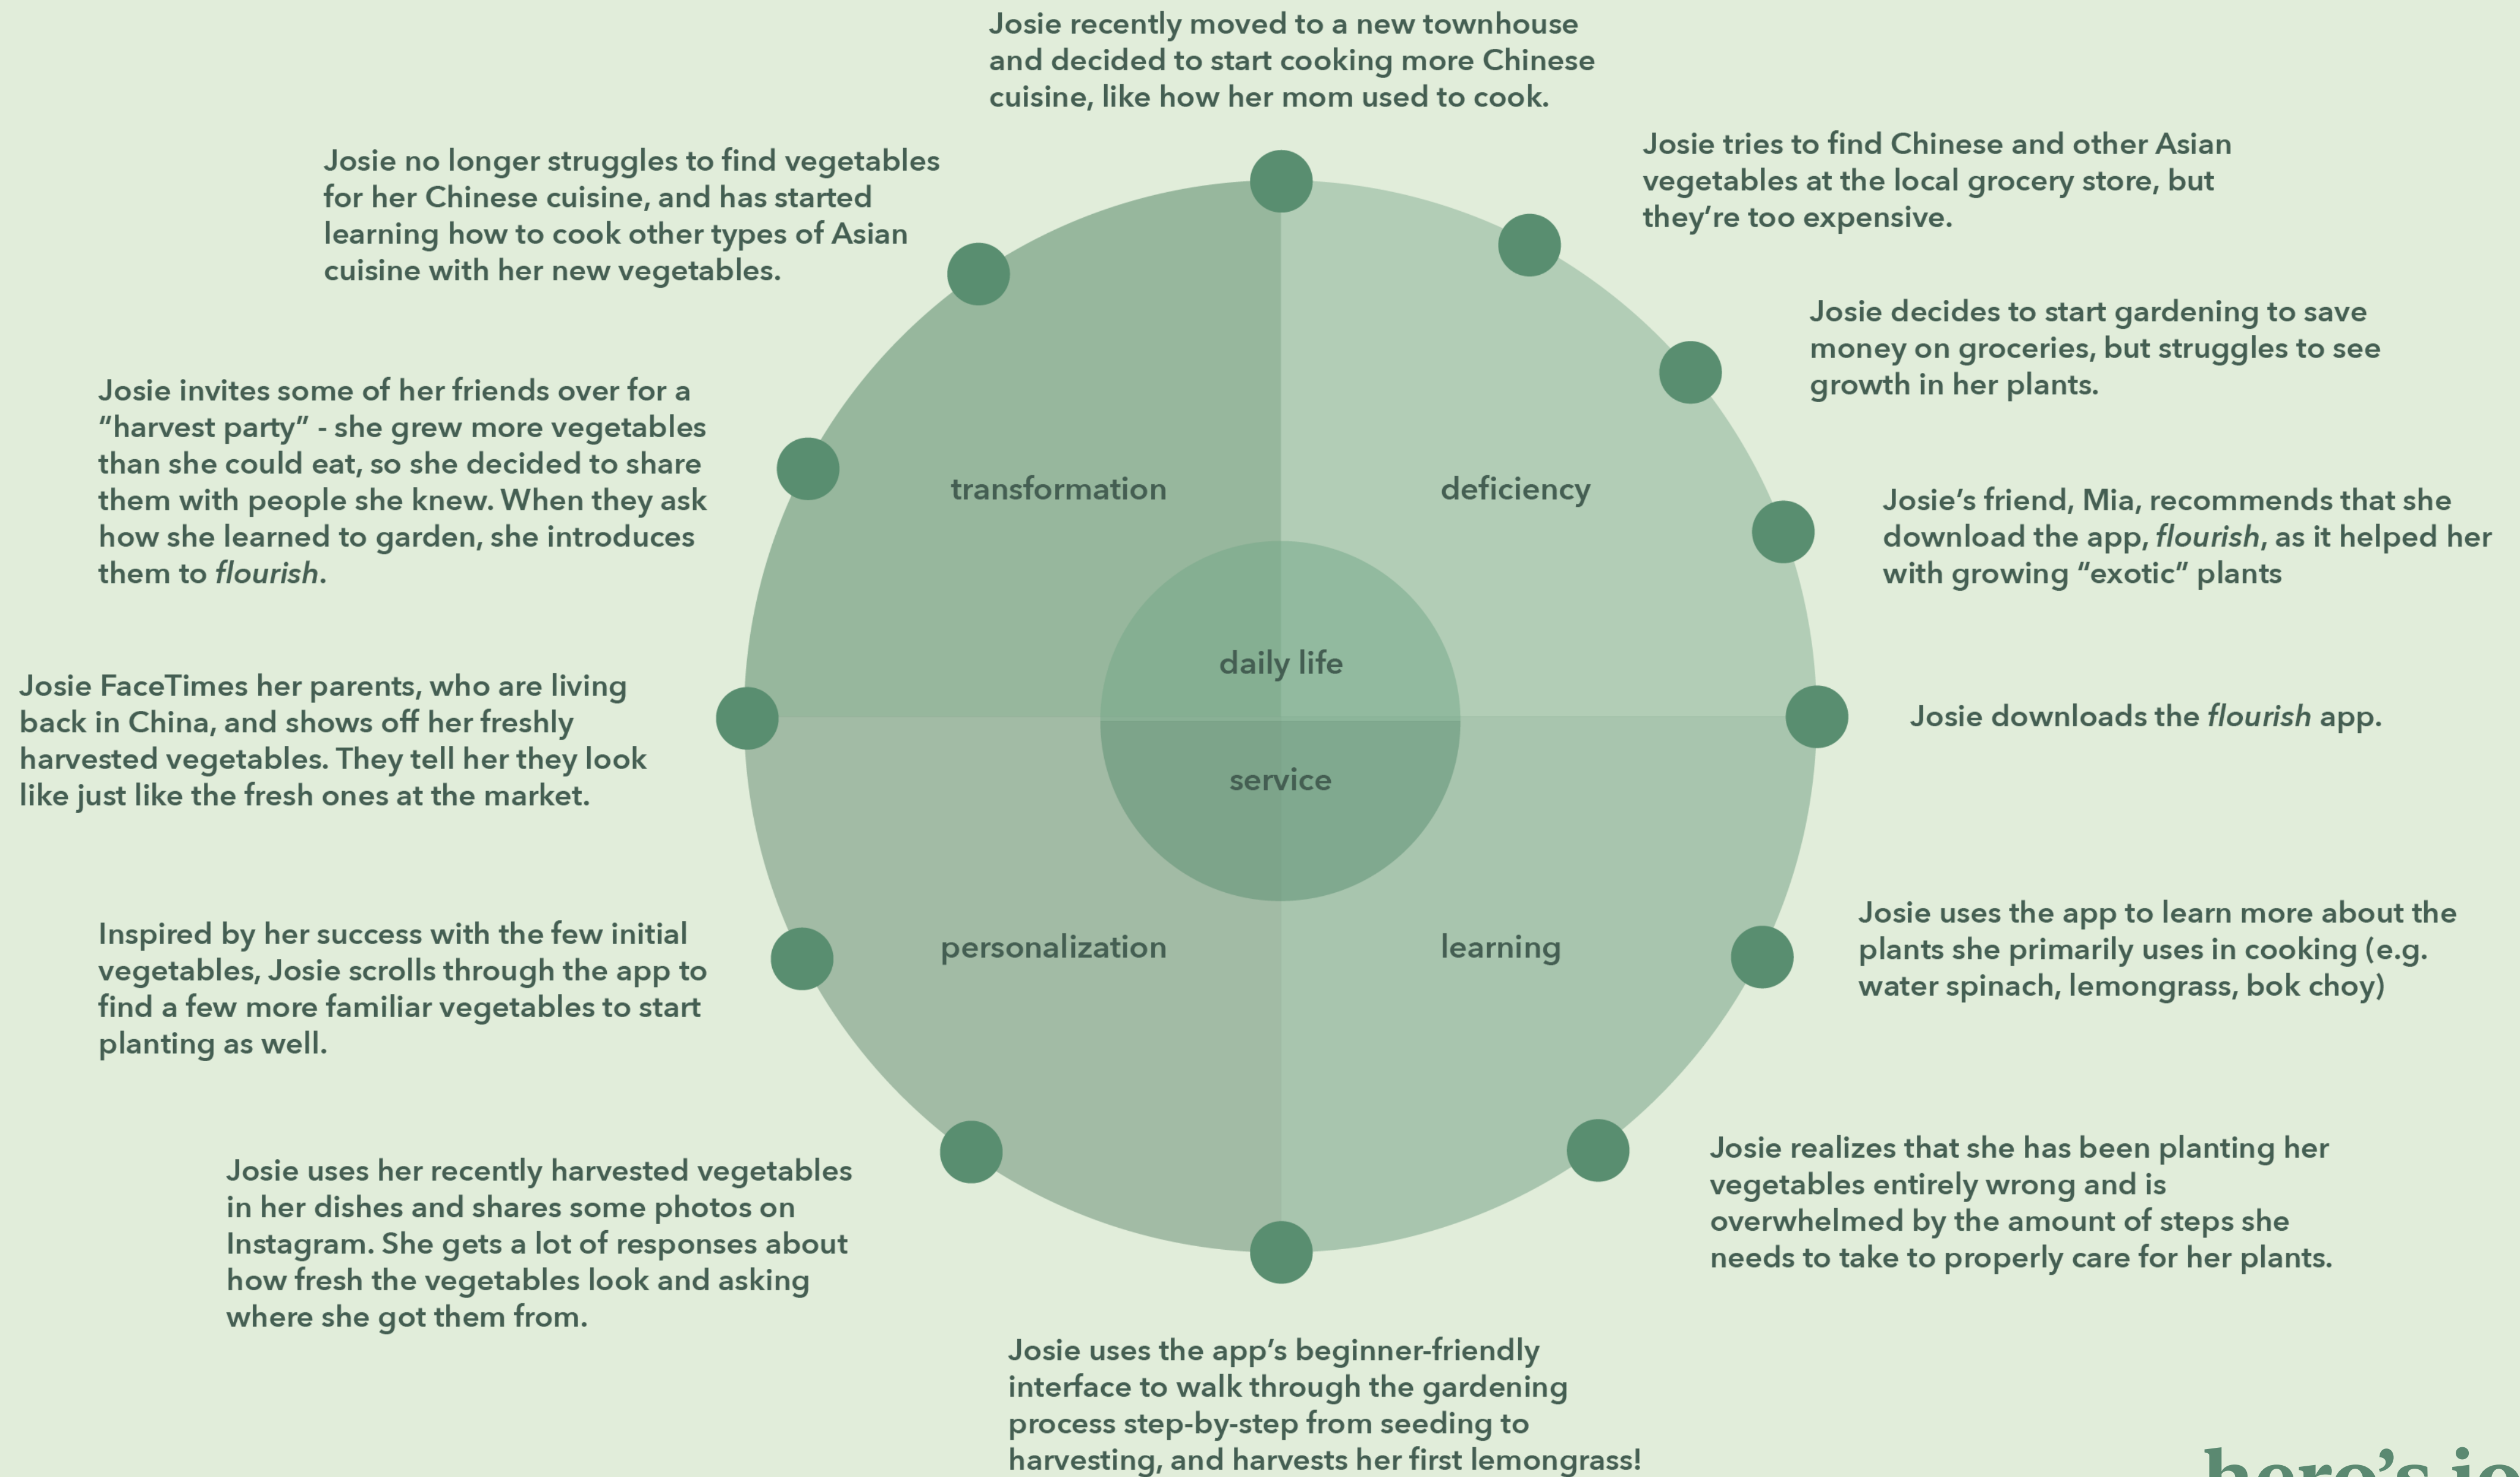

however, josie lives in a predominantly white neighborhood with very few asian grocery stores in the surrounding area. she has been unable to find a store that sells the vegetables at a reasonable price, and has had even less luck finding a store that sells asian plant seeds.

josie is looking for an app that:

- has information regarding where to find asian plant seeds, both online and local
- is beginner-friendly and aids in the gardening process from start to finish (seeding to harvesting)
- provides a community to ask questions

hero's journey

josie just moved into a new townhouse in a small town neighboring a relatively affluent city when shopping for asian vegetables at the chinese grocery store in the nearby city, josie is shocked by the incredibly high prices josie tries to grow green onions and some other asian vegetables at home, but fails to see any progress after several weeks the next time josie is at the chinese grocery store, she runs into aliyah, who shares her disapproval for the high prices and recommends flourish, an app she uses to help with gardening josie goes home and downloads the app. she reads up on green onions and finds out that she was overwatering the bulbs. she follows the tips on the app and is finally able to see results!

josie is able to use her freshly grown vegetables in her cooking and shares photos of the vegetables and her dishes on social media storyboards

josie thinks about many other asian vegetables she hasn't tried growing before and looks on flourish to try to expand her home garden after several months of gardening, josie eventually takes on more challenging projects and starts growing vegetables from seeds!

josie facetimes her parents, who are living back in china, and shows off her freshly harvested vegetables. they tell her they look just like the fresh ones at the market.
